Aboriginal Languages Trust Premier's Department NSW

3 June 2026

Hiring Manager

Dear Hiring Manager,

Language carries stories, identity, connection and belonging. As an Aboriginal communications and marketing professional, that understanding has shaped the way I approach stakeholder engagement, communication planning and community participation throughout my career. The opportunity to contribute to the Aboriginal Languages Trust particularly appeals to me because of its meaningful work supporting language revitalisation across Aboriginal communities in New South Wales.

Across consulting, freelance communications work and community-focused projects, I have developed experience designing communication strategies, creating audience-focused content, analysing engagement data and supporting initiatives that bring together diverse stakeholders. While my background differs from a traditional government communications pathway, it has provided broad exposure to strategic communications, marketing, reporting and engagement activities that align strongly with the objectives of this role.

At Purple Patch Consulting, I contributed to communication and marketing initiatives informed by audience and market research, helping shape strategies that improved engagement and organisational visibility. I produced communication materials, stakeholder-focused content and reporting outputs while working collaboratively with clients and project stakeholders to deliver outcomes within required timeframes — strengthening my ability to balance organisational objectives with stakeholder needs.

Through freelance communications and marketing consulting, I have worked across multiple projects simultaneously — developing content, coordinating deliverables, conducting audience research and preparing reporting frameworks to support evidence-based decision-making. Building reporting dashboards and analysing engagement performance reinforced the importance of measuring outcomes, identifying opportunities for improvement and ensuring communication activities remain responsive to community and stakeholder expectations.

A consistent theme throughout my work has been finding practical ways to improve communication effectiveness. I have developed AI-assisted communication systems, reporting tools and automation processes that support content creation, research and information analysis. While technology is only one part of effective engagement, I value approaches that reduce administrative burden, improve access to information and support more informed decision-making — a mindset that aligns well with the Trust's responsibility to communicate clearly and demonstrate impact through high-quality reporting.

The community focus of this role is particularly important to me. As an Aboriginal person, I understand the significance of respectful engagement, cultural integrity and genuine partnership with communities. My academic, professional and personal experiences have reinforced the value of listening carefully, building trust and ensuring communication activities are grounded in the perspectives and aspirations of the communities they are intended to support.

I hold a Bachelor of Commerce (Marketing) from the University of Wollongong — distinction-level results including a perfect score in Marketing Strategy — alongside ongoing development in analytics, AI systems and project management. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my experience and commitment to Aboriginal communities could support the Trust's objectives.

Kind regards,

Thomas Condran
